“ Ace, it is a hard blow to my heart to find out you're gone! I can hardly even believe I will never receive another phone call from you or hear one of your random jokes & riddles. I will never read another endearing salutation from you via text or email or have conversations that covered a multitude of topics & trivia. I will never get another birthday card or Christmas card from you, something I could always count on. And I will never have the opportunity to call or text you again and "make your day." Thank you for being such a faithful, loving, caring friend for over 40 years. I could always trust that if I ever needed anything whether it was just to talk or help with something, you would move heaven and earth to be there. Thank you for being the one who faithfully kept our friendship active. I love you and am going to miss you tons! Death doesn't necessarily mean permanent separation - I hope to see you again.

“ I was absolutely heartbroken to hear about Ace. So sorry to all of his family and friends for this loss.

I discovered his passing when a letter I had written to him was returned to me with the word "Deceased" written across the front. To his family or anybody that knows - please reach out to those of us who would like to know what happened to him. He was so very close to traveling here to Tucson and I had been expecting him.

Thank you.

“ I am just finding this put almost a year later as Ace and I had an enduring friendship that began in AZ when he was a Bouncer at the Bum Steer back in the mid seventies. I was an "under-age" student with a muscle car that he noticed when I drove into the parking lot. He had a Firebird back then and we raced many a time having fostered that initial relationship. We stayed in contact over all these years and I last spoke with him in November of 2017 when we were in the process of moving to Kentucky from Colorado. I still have a message on my phone from him asking if we made it OK.... God, I am so very sorry to hear this and my condolences as well to all who knew him and enjoyed the absolutely grand, bigger-than-life character he was and will be remembered as. Rest in Peace, my friend.

“ I have known Ace since 1983, having not physically seen him since the late 1980's or so, when he moved away from California, but, spoke with him many times a year for the past 30 years. I woke up in the middle of the night the other night, and realized that I had not heard from him in more than a year, as I had been very busy, and texted him, in which I received a response from the new owner of his previous cellphone number, texted his alternate number in which I received no response, and then went to the internet and almost immediately found this site. I refuse to believe that he has passed. He had been having many serious medical issues prior to his passing, and when I found this web site, I began crying for he first time in more than 40 years. So sad. What a great, compassionate and articulate person. A wonderful friend. I have encountered few people in this life, who were so interesting, informed and with such a terrific personality. Each time I think of him, I start to tear up. His friendship will be greatly missed, and I mentally beat myself up, when I realize that I waited this long before attempting to contact him again. Ace had a great and diverse circle of friends spread throughout the United States, and no words could adequately be expressed by me to describe his loss.
